1. Introduction (10 seconds):

- Summarize the concept from the reading.
- State how the lecture supports or expands on this concept.

2. Example Explanation (30-35 seconds):

- Describe the example provided by the professor in detail.
- Explain how this example demonstrates or applies the concept.

3. Conclusion (10 seconds):

- Connect the reading and lecture by emphasizing how the example clarifies the concept.

10. Sample High-Level Response

Question: How does the professor's example illustrate the concept of habitat fragmentation?

Introduction: "The reading passage explains habitat fragmentation as the division of ecosystems into smaller parts due to human activity. The professor expands on this by discussing its effects on animal migration."

Example Explanation: "In the lecture, the professor describes a forest that was divided by a new highway, separating the habitats of deer. As a result, the deer couldn't cross to access food and mates on the other side. Over time, this isolation caused the population to decline. The professor emphasizes that this illustrates how habitat fragmentation disrupts ecosystems by limiting animal movement and reducing genetic diversity."

Conclusion: "In conclusion, the professor's example of the divided forest highlights the real-world impact of habitat fragmentation, reinforcing the definition provided in the reading."

Sample Complete Response

Question: How does the example given by the professor help illustrate the meaning of test marketing?

Introduction:

"The professor provides an example of test marketing to elaborate on how companies assess their products before a full-scale launch."

Description of the Example:

"In the lecture, the professor describes a film company that wanted to release a cartoon movie for children but lacked experience in this genre. To test its appeal, they conducted test marketing by showing an unfinished version of the cartoon to a group of children. The feedback revealed that the children's favorite character was not the main one but a secondary character, the dog."

Connection to the Concept:

"Based on this insight, the company made adjustments, promoting the dog as the primary character in the movie. This change contributed to the film's great box-office success. The professor highlights that this process exemplifies test marketing by demonstrating how companies gather feedback and make necessary changes before launching a product."

Conclusion:

"In conclusion, the professor's example effectively demonstrates the importance of test marketing as a tool for refining products to meet consumer preferences and ensure success."
